It was my pleasure to attend the British Society of Geomorphology (BSG) Postgraduate Training Workshop and to be selected for the grant provided by the International Association of Geomorphologists (IAG). This selection gave me an amazing opportunity that will help me in my further studies.

During the workshop, we had the opportunity to listen to professionals from BSG who gave us valuable insight into our future careers and what postgraduate life looks like. Dr Lucy Clarke gave several lectures on how to adapt to PhD life and what to expect from it. Later, Dr Emma Shuttleworth shared her experience in academic research and the academic working environment. Finally, Dr John Wainwright introduced us to R and Python programming, which will most likely be very useful for many of us in the future.

During the event, I had the chance to present my work to more than 20 students from across Europe. My presentation, Vegetation density analysis in the floodplain of the Tisza River in southern Hungary and northern Serbia using photogrammetric methods, was delivered to a group of students whose questions helped me improve my presentation skills and gave me new ideas to think about based on their feedback.

While attending the workshop, I also had the opportunity to meet other students and learn about their research topics, especially in glaciology, which I find very interesting. Talking with other students helped me develop new ideas and ask more interesting questions, while also trying to support and help others with their work.

Besides the formalities of the event, I got opportunity to walk around the beautiful scenery of Windsor park and see around the Windsor. Amazing scenery of environment around the Long Walk made this event a full experience. Also our hosts at Cumberland Lodge made sure that we had everything provided and Christmas atmosphere felt like a movie.

Sincerely,

Aleksandar
